

ZTECHNIK VSTREAM POLYCARBONATE WINDSCREEN

► National Cycle developed an incredible polycarbonate windscreen for the BMW 1200 GS Adventure. The screen is made of FMR-coated polycarbonate, which is 3x more scratch resistant and 10x stronger than the original screen. At 23" in height, it certainly will protect the rider from all the unwanted elements.

The aftermarket part is slightly higher than the manufacturer's OEM, which certainly works in your favor. The advanced "V" shaped contour directs the wind further away from the front of the bike and around the rider, creating a quiet cocoon behind the screen.

My test consisted of various roads, highways, curving back roads, and the city. Throughout the test, it remained quiet, and the ride wasn't too choppy at high speeds.

At $269.95 for the screen and $79.95 for the headlight cover they are well worth the expense for the extra protection.

LIBERTY SPORT RIDER SUNGLASSES

► I can't think of a sport that places a higher importance on quality eyewear than motorcycling. Our glasses must deflect eye-damaging projectiles, reduce the wind turbulence that blurs vision, and also offset the glare of the sun. While doing all of this, we expect them to be both great looking and comfortable! Now that's a pretty tall order.

Liberty Sport's "Rider Polarized" sunglasses may be as close as you'll get to the perfect eyewear for motorcyclists. First, the company's removable "MagTraxion" eye cup allows effective air flow and helps screen out debris. They also feature polarized polycarbonate sun lenses that have a scratch-resistant coating. The lenses also offer 100% UVA & UVB protection, and were designed to allow excellent peripheral vision.

All of these features combine to make the Rider Polarized a very safe and rider-friendly pair of glasses.

A semi-rigid case, cleaning cloth, pouch for eye cups and an adjustable cord come standard with the Rider Polarized glasses. They can also be made prescriptive by an optical retailer. Liberty is a quality eyewear company that focuses on glasses for a variety of sports and activities. ## ZTECHNIK BLACK WINDSCREEN FOR BMW S1000RR

► National Cycle specializes in innovative windscreen technology. Because of their efficient production, we had the opportunity to test a windscreen prototype for the S1000RR. The screen gives the S1000RR a menacing and aggressive profile. Wind direction is comparable to the OEM screen, although this aftermarket is quieter. If you're looking for a sexy upgrade to the S1000RR, this aftermarket part is the perfect alternative.
